1 The soda fountain drinking straw has been given an elegant upgrade for Tiffany & Co.'s new Everyday Objects line. We prefer the Crazy straw in vermeil, shown, but it is also available in rose vermeil and classic Tiffany sterling silver. Vermeil and rose vermeil, $350 each; sterling silver, $250. tiffany.com

2 New York design firm Workshop/APD teamed up with Desiro for its first commercially available furniture collection, which includes a sleek bar cart made from burnt steel and poplar wood charred using the traditional Japanese blackening technique of shousugiban. Other finishes are offered. 38" w. x 17" d. x 34" h., $17,360. 1stdibs.com

3 Stash your favorite mementos in a sleek box of ebonized walnut and brass, modeled after Japanese bento boxes, by Vincent Pocsik. The container is part of the Los Angeles-based designer's new tabletop collection for Lawson-Fenning; a bleached maple version is also available. 18" w. x 6" d. x 4" h., $1,300. lawsonfenning.com

4 Handmade from recycled raw cotton in the Guatemalan highlands, this whimsical throw pillow is embroidered in red and black thread with an apropos motto that translates to "I found you in my dreams." 22" L. x 17" w., $300. aerostudios.com

5 Shimmering sheets of hand-blackened steel in a zigzag formation comprise Uhuru's Tack on sole, finished in antiqued brass and available in custom sizes. 69" w. x 12" d. x 37" h., $13,200. uhurudesign.com
